John Gardner was chief of police and he ordered Mr. Steele, as a patrolman, to meet Parker, who was a bad man, as the latter crossed the river bridge, going to North Topeka. Steele's gun was directed, and when he shot Parker the shooting resulted. Steele succeeded in shooting first. Parker's disability resulted, but Mr. Steele regretted the affair so much that he made full reparation by supporting the negro as long as he lived. Steele shot in self-defense.
